Prof. Archie L. Surratt, who taught science at Kentucky State for 38 years, retired in the Centennial Year. In appreciation of his long service, this edition of the Thorobred is dedicated to him.

An interview with Prof. Archie L. Surratt

Thorobred: When and how did you come to Kentucky State?

Prof. Surratt: In 1948 I was in graduate school at Michigan State University and was just completing my Master's degree. I had considered police work, but I was in the Graystone Ballroom in Detroit, and a policeman asked some fellows very politely to stop blocking some steps. Well, as he turned to go down the steps, they threw Coke bottles at him. I changed my mind after that.

Dean Bradford was then told by someone of me as a possibility to fill a position in the science department.

Thorobred: You've been quoted often as saying, "You're too early for tomorrow's class and too late for today's." Why is getting to class on time so important?

Prof. Surratt: If they're allowed to, everyone will find an excuse to come to class late. Why print a time to start if we're not going to go by it?

Thorobred: What changes have you seen take place in the university since your arrival?

Prof. Surratt: When I came, everything was segregated. The campus, the two guest rooms in McCullin Hall in particular, always served as motel to travelers. There was more togetherness and concern of faculty for one another. Everyone knew everyone.

Thorobred: What have been your most important accomplishments at KSU?

Prof. Surratt: To have helped to redirect the thinking of a large number of students. Many have graduated and gone on to pursue advanced and terminal degrees at other institutions.

Thorobred: How did you come to choose your field of study?

Surratt: I was always sort of curious about things. I had some really outstanding teachers in a number of basic science classes, who I'm sure influenced my decision.

Thorobred: What has inspired and motivated you to accomplish what you have?

Prof. Surratt: A cousin who taught me in the Fifth and Sixth grades, and her brother who attended Rust College in Mississippi. They were very inspirational and good role models.

Thorobred: What do you see as KSU's role over the next 100 years?

Prof. Surratt: To do what we do well now even better, and to a greater extent. Better public relations, improvements in the area of instruction, providing more individual attention to the problems and difficulties encountered by our students are all necessary here at the university in the next 100 years.

Thorobred: What advice would you give to students?

Prof. Surratt: Be the best that you can be. Remember that anything worth doing is worth doing well.

The Honorable
Martha Layne Collins
Governor of Kentucky

Raymond M. Burse
Ninth President of Kentucky State University

Kentucky Governor J. Proctor Knott on May 18, 1886 ratified legislation that established the State Normal School for Colored Persons. The promise that the occasion held, first for young black Kentuckians in the late 19th century, has alternately grown and diminished over the past 100 years. But thousands of persons — the institution's faculty, staff, administrators, students, trustees, regents, and alumni, as well as state education leaders, legislators, governors, and many friends in Kentucky and elsewhere — have left an indelible, strengthening stamp on what in 1986 is Kentucky State University. And what began as a rare educational opportunity for a racial minority has become an open educational opportunity for persons of all cultures and races. Past and present make Kentucky State University one of Kentucky's truly historic and important institutions of higher learning.

Sincerely,

Raymond M. Burse
President

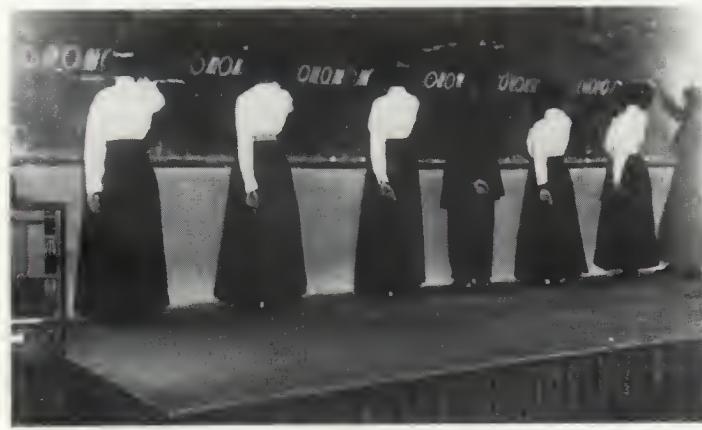

100 years ago, a college was formed in Kentucky for colored persons

Dr. E. E. Hume introduced the state legislation that established the Kentucky State Normal School for Colored Persons.

In the spring of 1986, Hume Hall, named after KSU's great benefactor, was rededicated after a complete refurbishing.

For a normal school to train teachers, calligraphy was very important. Photo courtesy of the Kentucky Historical Society.

In 1886, Frankfort celebrated its centennial anniversary. Celebrants from throughout Kentucky and the nation came to join the festivities.

It was into this setting that the Kentucky State Normal School for Colored Persons was born, founded as a result of an act passed by the Kentucky legislature and signed by Governor J. Procter Knott on May 18, 1886.

The 4,000 residents of Frankfort at that time, many of whom had vivid recollections of the Civil War and who were swept up in the euphoria of the city's centennial celebrations, were keenly interested in having the new institution located in their town. Toward that end, the city donated $1,500 — a considerable amount in 1886 dollar — and a site on a scenic bluff over looking the town.

In 1887, Recitation Hall (now Jackson Hall), the college's first building, was erected. With John H. Jackson as president, the new school opened in October with three teachers and 55 students.

Major dates in KSU history

August 30, 1890: Designated a land-grant institution.

March 1, 1939: Received initial accreditation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

July 1, 1972: Upgraded from college to a university by the state of Kentucky.

January 10, 1973: Began offering its first graduate program.

January 13, 1983: Assigned mission as Kentucky's liberal studies — oriented public university.

The Normal Institute evolved beyond training teachers early in its history.

In 1890, the institution became a land-grant college and the departments of home economics, agriculture and mechanics were added to the curriculum, changing it from primarily a teacher's college. In the spring of that year, the school produced its first graduates, a class of five.

In 1902, the name was changed to Kentucky Normal and Industrial Institute for Colored Persons. The name was changed again in 1926 to Kentucky State Industrial College for Colored Persons, and in 1938, the school was named the Kentucky State College for Negroes. In 1952, the term "for Negroes" was dropped. The institution became Kentucky State University in 1972, and in 1973, the first graduate students enrolled in its School of Public Affairs.

There were parties at the college on Normal Hill in the Heyday of jazz.

Training for the world of business was available in the '30s.

Outstanding alums

Although many Kentucky State graduates have been successful in their chosen fields, the late Whitney M. Young, Jr. — for whom the College of Leadership Studies is named — is probably the most noted and recognized of the University's alumni in recent history. Other noted graduates of Kentucky State include H. C. Russell, Jr., a vice president of the Pepsi-Cola Company; Charles Anderson, Jr., the first black legislator in a southern state since the Reconstruction period; Ersa Hines Poston, former vice-chairperson of the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board; Gilbert McCarty, commissioner of the Kentucky Department of Insurance; Bailus Walker, Jr., Massachusetts' commissioner of public health; George Wilson, secretary of the Kentucky Corrections Cabinet; Ivan Mefford, a noted brain-chemistry researcher; Harrison B. Wilson, president of Norfolk State University; and Luther Burse, president of Fort Valley State College.

A Kentucky State program believed to be unique in public higher education in the United States commenced in fall, 1983. It is that of the Whitney M. Young, Jr. College of Leadership Studies. In the liberal arts college with high admission standards, students undertake an intensive curriculum based upon selected masterworks of literature, philosophy, science, and the arts taught under the tutorial method.

A growing, changing institution

The Centennial Year saw one campus landmark fall to the wrecking ball, only to be reincarnated as the Rufus B. Atwood Agricultural Facility.

Atwood Hall, the dormitory that housed a generation-plus of KSU men, could not be preserved cost-effectively. It was torn down. The old Underwood Cafeteria became available for renovation when the new cafe was constructed a year ago. It has been transformed into a modern facility for the Community Research Service.

A modern university with an important mission

Over the past 25 years, the University enrollment has nearly tripled, the faculty has more than doubled, and 23 new structures have been added to the 309-acre campus.

Under the direction of its ninth president, Raymond M. Burse, a graduate of Centre College and Harvard University Law School and a Rhodes scholar, Kentucky State has again changed its mission and role in Kentucky's public higher education system.

As part of a mission prescribed by the state Council on Higher Education, in 1986 KSU has become Kentucky's unique, small, liberal studies university. The institution is to excel as a small school with the lowest undergraduate student-faculty ratio (presently 13-1) among the state's public institutions, deliver a liberal studies curriculum, meet the educational needs of area students through a community college program, serve the needs of state government employees, and maintain an inter-institutional graduate center. It also has cooperative extension and research functions as an 1890 land-grant institution.

From normal school to University, the great changes at Kentucky State are reflected in Jackson Hall, above, and Hathaway Hall. Jackson is medieval in feeling. Hathaway, with its angular surfaces, is about today and tomorrow.

HOMECOMING 1985

Homecoming is more than football and friends, yet sports and people are a vital part of that weekend in October. Alumni and undergraduates, many of them separate generations of the same families, come back to the college on the hill for a good time and a glimpse of the new Kentucky State University.

It's a time for encouragement, and reminiscence, too.

"Did you see the new cafeteria?" an alum asks.

"Let me show you how work is coming on the new Hume Hall," a student says.

"Things have surely changed since I've been away," someone else remarks.

The weekend was warm and damp, but spirits were high. Several distinguished alumni, Ivan Cotman, W. Cuttie Bacon, III and Roy Bussell among them, reached over to the undergrads with the voice of encouragement and experience.

The game was a soggy affair, played in a steady drizzle that turned the playing field into a gummy pasture.

But the events surrounding the game — a high-steppin' parade — halftime musical precision — and the concert and parties are all part of the memories of Homecoming '85.

The Centennial Homecoming is next. See you in '86!

HOOME COMING ROYALTY

A Kentucky State University Homecoming demands a beautiful homecoming queen.

Miss Tammye Lynn Mitchell is KSU's Homecoming Queen, 1985. Tammye is from East Lansing, Mich., and is graduating with a bachelor's degree in psychology.

Miss Valerie Whitehead is Miss KSU's first attendant. She adds grace and charm to the Homecoming court. Valerie is an engineering major from Toledo, Ohio.

Miss Camille Coleman is Miss KSU's second attendant. Her presence and beauty complete the Homecoming Court.

Camille hails from Louisville, Ky., and is a fashion merchandising major.

The Parade Steps Off

The 1985 Homecoming Parade had a variety of attractions for all to see. Spectators watched as participants marched, danced, and drove through the streets of Frankfort.

What's a Homecoming Parade without beautiful ladies? Leading the march of lovelies is Queen Tammye Mitchell and Sheila Johnson, a member of her court.

A trio of Hunter Hall beauties is not far behind.

Making the military proud is Cheryl McKnight for the ROTC.

Karen Davis and Traci Noland show the spectators what a smile can do.

Alison Thomas puts a lot of enthusiasm into greeting the crowd.

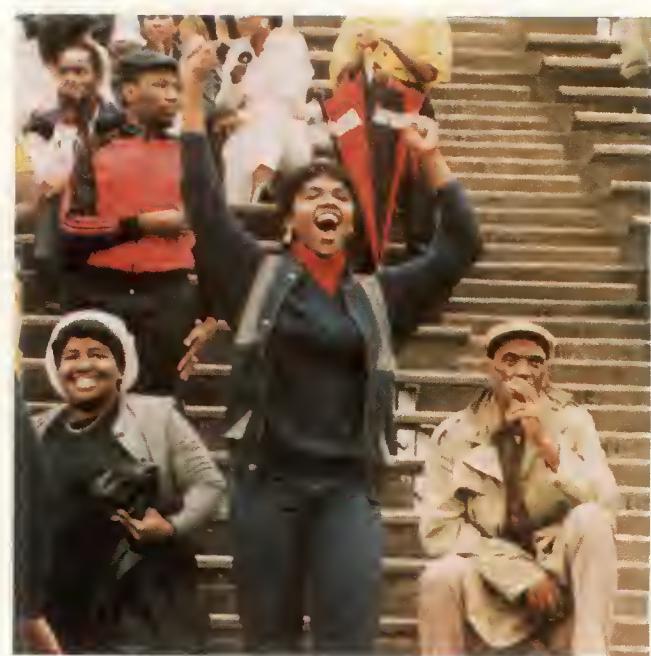

Some future K-Rettes from Cincinnati's Woodward High?

Harrassed on offense, frustrated on defense, Homecoming Game 1985 went into the record books as a 61-7 defeat. Even so, Coach James Walker encouraged his troops and found a final good word for everyone.

"Can this really be the score?" K-Rettes Monique Burton and Judy Adams seem to say.

There is always at least something to cheer about.

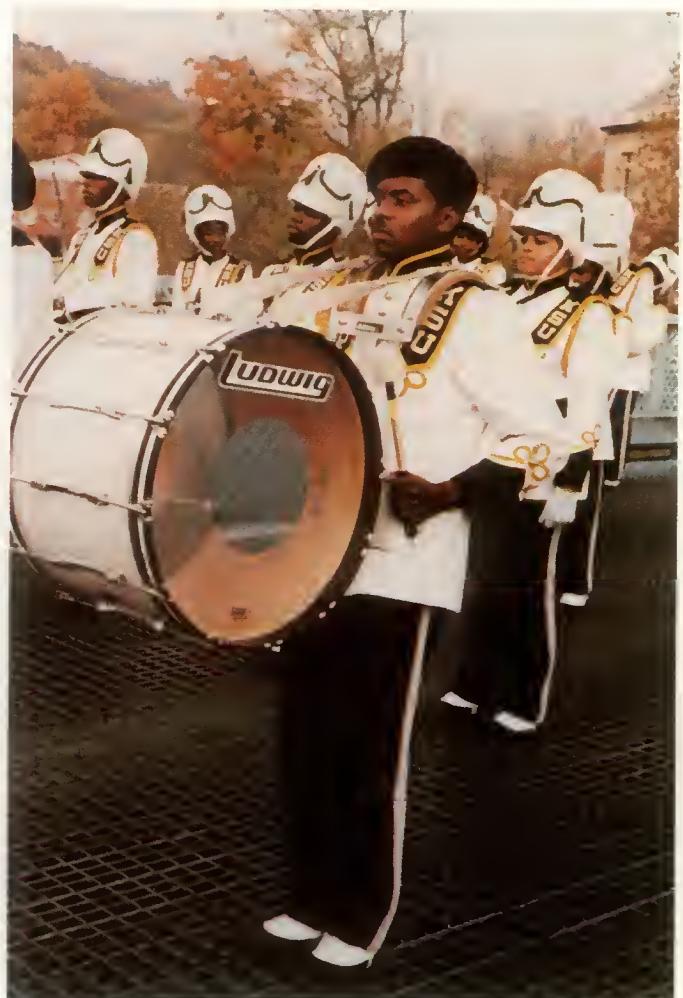

A word with Coach Walker.

From the opening notes, the Kentucky State University Marching Band combines modern rhythms and clever melodic arrangements to captivate and move its audience.

On Homecoming Day, the band snaked through downtown Frankfort and provided entertainment during half-time, giving a fabulous show.

Nobody moves like the K-Rettes move to the beat of the Thorobred Band.

The cymbals player keeps a crisp beat.

Following the half-time performance, the band accepted a challenge from Central State. Central may have won the game, but the Thorobred Band captured the cadence competition.

HOMECOMING CONCERT 85

1985's Homecoming concert featured the mellow sounds of Alexander O'Neal and the Dazz Band. It was an exciting evening of music at its best.

Skip Martin sings one to the ladies as the band dazzles the crowd.

Alexander O'Neal — the soul balladeer.

When the weather at Alumni Stadium became a little too damp on Homecoming Day, some fans retreated to the stadium's corridors to stay dry and socialize.

Quite a few found a pleasant surprise. On the tables were old Thorobred Yearbooks. The books went back 20 years, and the word spread. Several hundred yearbooks were given out for a nominal fee. The alumni were happy and drier and the staff was richer in cash and spirits for the experience.

ACADEMICS

Great minds get together in Blazer Library.

The books look good at Kentucky State

The current administration, under President Raymond M. Burse, has put forth a concerted effort to enhance and restructure the academic core of the university as well as the physical campus. The university is changing in a profound and positive way.

The university's mission is to be Kentucky's small public institution for liberal studies. Through the coming years, all bachelor of arts degree candidates will be required to complete four semesters of a foreign language, part of a core curriculum of humanities, natural sciences and social sciences.

Entrance requirements have been revised to reflect minimum test scores. Achievement at the secondary level will be important for success at KSU.

Whether you share those books with a friend, . . .

or tough it out alone . . .

you've got to kick back and get it on . . . to get that homework done.

Achievement means being all you can be

The Whitney M. Young, Jr. College of Leadership Studies continued to grow in the Centennial Year. The college is now in its fourth year of existence. It was instituted to give talented young minds a broader scope of study centered around the Great Books program followed at many outstanding universities such as St. John's University in Maryland.

Social organizations, once at the foothills of academic achievement, have now been required to challenge themselves in order to retain their charters. All students, members of social groups or not, are striving to do their best in preparation for a competitive job market and a society needing leadership.

Classes are the basic means of bringing students together with an expert in the field to discuss reading material, to ask questions and to begin independent investigation through further reading and research. Classes stimulate achievement.

Paying attention is half the battle.

A point is made in class — it's something to consider.

Students and machines create a strong link.

Computers permeate every aspect of modern business life, making computer science a very popular major at Kentucky State. The lab is equipped with top notch equipment, the instructors are first rate and the students are eager. We have a winning combination.

An instructor can be useful when there's a knot in the problem.

A problem can generate a good deal of paper when the results come out of the printer.

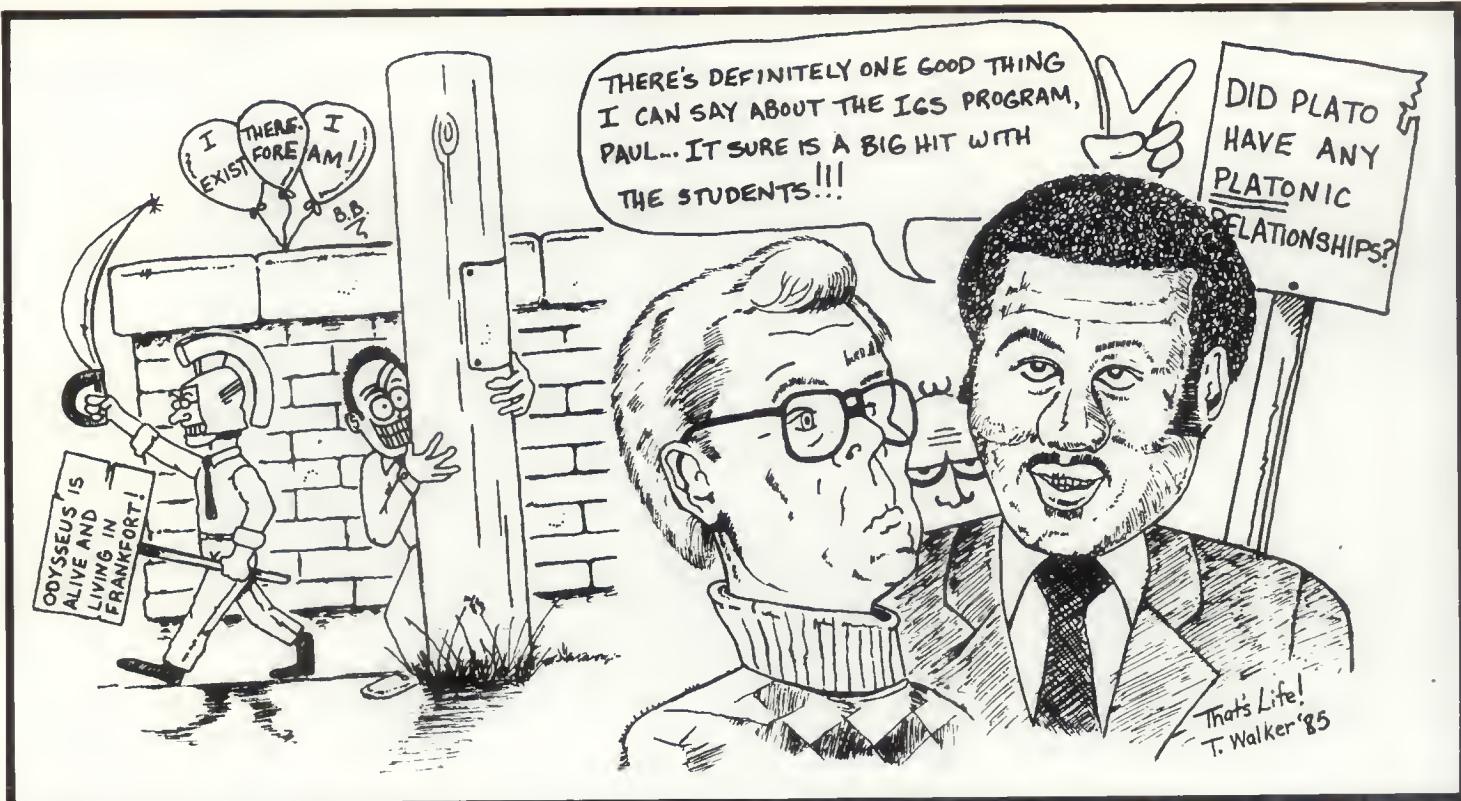

Quiet spots

Finding the right spot to study is as simple as locating an empty classroom or a corner right outside the classroom door.

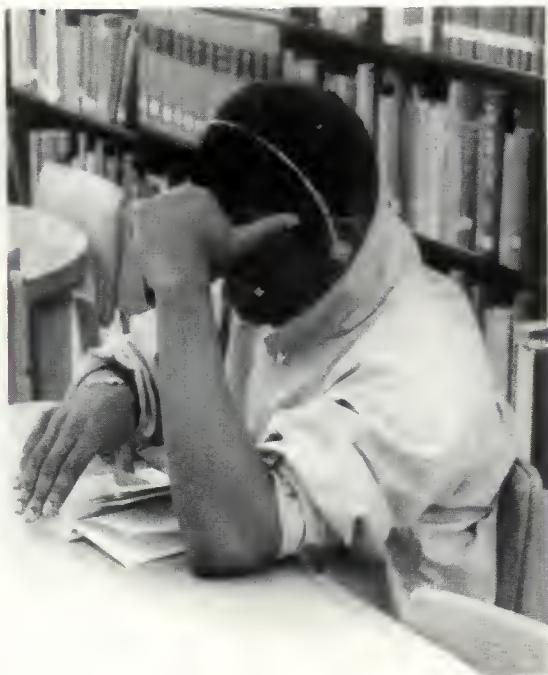

Material from the book and the class come to life in the lab — especially the biology lab — for Darryl Dubose, Arthur Cobb and Marla Games.

IGS Anyone?

The Intergrative Studies program is the culmination of the Liberal Studies Core Curriculum. It's a great way to learn other cultures through such disciplines as philosophy, literature, science and social science. Student cartoonist Tyrone Walker sees it, however, as . . .

There are times when you tune out the rest of the world to get the job done . . .

. . . and sometimes studying just reaches a saturation point.

There's a lot to take advantage of at KSU

The major areas of study at KSU in the Centennial Year included the College of Arts and Sciences, The College of Applied Sciences, the Community College, The Whitney M. Young, Jr., College of Leadership Studies, and the Graduate Center.

Within these fundamental areas lie the programs of study leading to both two-year associate degrees, four year baccalaureate degrees and the Master of Public Affairs degree.

All of them, as these pages show, require diligent effort and a sense of humor to achieve.

Mostly, however, there's a point to be made . . .

. . . or a last minute addition to a term paper in the student center . . .

. . . because, at the end of the semester, it's time to sign-up all over again.

The Kentucky State University Concert Choir

We made beautiful music together

KSU is known far and wide for the sounds it has produced. It has also produced musicians that kept that heritage alive once they went out from the university. If you have ever heard the contemporary numbers "Freak-A-Zoid," "Slow Jam," or "Headlines," you know the impact Midnight Star has had on modern music.

On campus, our Gospel Ensemble has long been revered. They often perform in the community, too, in and out of church. Under the able direction of Carl Smith, the University Concert Choir enjoys a similar reputation. "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" stirs the blood at Commencement. Their classical repertory is extensive.

The Jazz Ensemble knows how to cook. On certain Fridays, they have given hour-long concerts which only leave the listeners begging for more.

At times, the Marching Band is the 12th man on the field, coming on when spirits are flagging, to lift the players up and keep them fighting.

A lot of the current musical excitement on campus belongs to "Shablis" and "Five Steps Forward." They are in the beginning stages of establishing professional reputations.

Shablis consists of Vanessa Smith, Tonya Triplett, Tracey Owens, and Felicia Whatley. Five Steps Forward includes Reginald Persley, Mike McGlown, Rodney Foster, Darryl Turpin, and Stacey Gibbs. The two vocal groups answer the question, "What if . . . (I reached out for something big . . . on my own?")

Music at K-State keeps on rollin'. May the beat go on and on.

A toast to Shablis!

The brass section is like a driving engine.

Conducting is an art — whether in the skillful hands of Band Director Lewis Liddell or Tonya Triplett of the Gospel Ensemble.

Learning about work

There's work to do!

Learning about work takes many forms. One of the most basic forms is the federal work-study program administered by the Financial Aid Office. Students are employed in various campus activities ranging from clerical duties to manual labor. The jobs frequently have little bearing on an intended major, but they do teach the skills of reliability, punctuality and many other positive work habits.

The work helps the university function smoothly, while allowing students to defray part of their college expenses.

Guests visit the university frequently in a variety of settings. Some attend classes to explain their work and stimulate students' curiosity. Others meet informally with students outside of class.

The office of Counseling and Placement helps students apply their academic interests to jobs and careers beyond the university. The placement office sponsors job fairs where employees and students may discuss the students' aspirations and qualifications.

Dial-A-Job is a program that matches local employers and students seeking temporary work.

Cooperative Education is a program where students receive academic credit for work in their major areas of interest.

In January, new furniture was moved into Young Hall with the help of student labor. Every day, the cafeteria requires student workers.

At a career fair, an interview consists of questions about qualifications balanced by questions about opportunities.

Sooner or later the topic of salary comes up. The applicant measures money. The employer measures the capacity of the applicant to contribute to the organization.

Guests bring the reality of careers to Kentucky State

Dr. Jim Omatseye, visiting Fulbright Fellow from Nigeria, explains the secondary school system in his nation, where admission to college is highly competitive.

Ricky Pearson, a lawyer for the Commonwealth, and a Naval Reserve Officer, tells some pre-law students what to expect in a legal career. Pearson is the husband of KSU's Dr. Patricia Pearson. He recently argued a case for the state of Kentucky before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Recruiters welcome here!

Roger Futrell, a recruiter for state government, advised students to apply as soon as possible for state jobs.

David Silverman, a recruiter for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, spoke to a criminal justice class about careers in law enforcement.

In Prof. Alvin Seals' class, poverty was the topic of discussion. Poverty has been institutionalized, Murray said.

During his two-day stay, Murray and Dr. Jim Graves of the School of Public Affairs visited the university's aquaculture facilities to discuss fish harvesting techniques with Dr. Michael Cremer.

The Manager of San Diego visits KSU

Sylvester Murray, the city manager of San Diego, California, shared his views on government, politics and business with several groups of KSU students. Murray sees them as a partnership in society, not as separate entities.

His insights stimulated some thinking about public careers.

They pour on the team spirit

A lot of the job of the KSU cheerleaders and yell leaders is finding that spark that will ignite a crowd and the team on the playing field. It's not easy. When it rains, when the opponent is relentless, when the team seems like it's by itself out there. That's when they come up with the spirit. What can you call it but spirit?

Then there are moments when that back slips in for a TD, when that forward slams it in for two. You hear them then, and it's pandemonium. They're Thorobreds, too. A rare breed.

Thorobreds post perfectly forgettable football season

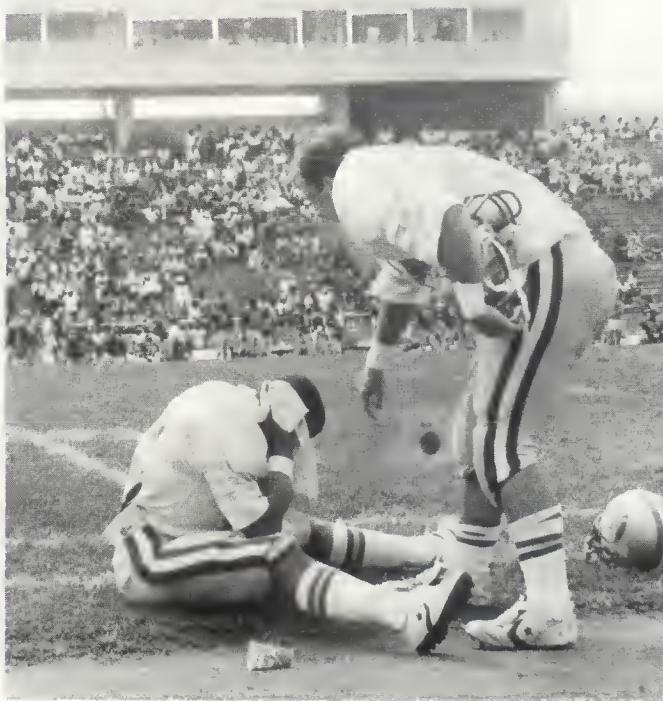

If the seeds of football success had been planted, they are either for a biennial crop, or they lacked the proper cultivation. The seeds for Kentucky State were a variety of talented, sizeable athletes, but there was no crop of winners, however. There was some talk, at season's end, of scrapping the entire program. Talk inspired by a record of 11 losses and no wins.

Some players said the coaching staff lacked experience. Some coaches said the players lacked respect. Others said the team "forgot how to win." Regardless, the season grew longer as the ball refused to bounce our way. Halves seemed as long as games as the points rolled by with the Thorobreds on the short end of them.

The seeds are there, however. If they are not traumatized by transfers, ineligibility and injuries, there may be a crop of winners yet.

Men's basketball in need of good tuneup; patiently

There was no harmony in Frankfort as Breds basketball fizzled to a dreary close at the end of winter. Not short on talent or desire, the men simply failed to find that right combination. Some games saw a lot of rebounds for the Green and Gold; in others, field goal percentages were high. Nevertheless, a dismal 5-22 season was the result of a toxic disease called turnoveritis.

But the Breds did more than sit back. Mike Beal and Larry Robinson, freshman guards, showed great promise. Charleston "Bubby" Bowles showed some hustle that can earn the team some respect and a respectable won-lost record.

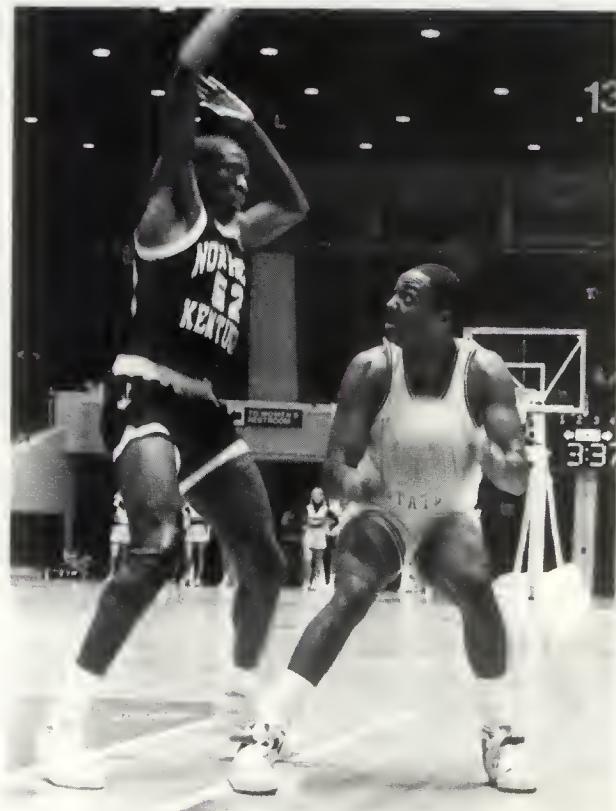

Morris Stoner, a pacesetter at forward last season, was lost to the team, with predictably negative results, because of an injury that kept him out of action.

Walter Wright, towering above the rest of the team, made a valiant effort at the big man spot but often came away without the rebound or the inside shot. He'll be back, though, to try to turn that around. And so will much of the '86 squad. Let's get the ball bouncing our way again!

Oops and ouches, that's how the ball bounces

The squad was small, sometimes numbering only five players. Turnovers, low shooting percentages, and eligibility problems all plagued this year's squad.

Our Thorobrettes were challenged, tested, and faced with numerous difficulties. Even so, let the record show that these dedicated and motivated young women led by an inspiring first-year coach never, never, never gave up.

Sonya King, the senior sparkplug in the rebounds department, led the squad in heart and hustle as well. Her final year as a Thorobrette showed the squad and the university what being a senior Thorobrette really means.

Looking, looking, looking . . . for that open passing lane is the talented Lisa Bowman, preparing to take the ball to the paint.

Celebrating the Centennial

Campus Life

The flags of the United States of America and the Commonwealth of Kentucky and the Centennial flag of Kentucky State University fly over a campus that is now 100 years old. On that January 16 morning, the Centennial was underway.

100 years' service to the commonwealth is marked in 1986

On a bright, cold January morning, the university community paused to note that Kentucky State University was 100 years old. President Raymond M. Burse said the Centennial year at the university would be "an opportunity to recognize where the university has been, celebrate its past and present, and look forward to the next 100 years."

The Stars and Stripes, the state flag and the university's centennial flag were raised in the light morning breeze. The centennial flag is a dark green banner with the university seal bracketed by the word "Centennial" and the date, 1986, below.

After the flag was raised, the Alma Mater was played on the university's new carillon chimes installed in Hume Hall. Hume Hall itself was nearing complete renovation, and would open in the summer.

The crowd of around 300 sang the Alma Mater and stood in the cool air for about 30 minutes as the president and others noted the occasion. Other speakers included Dean Leonard Slade, the Rev. Herman Bowers, and SGA President Cuttie W. Bacon IV. The university Concert Choir sang.

Television crews captured the historic moment.

The university community paused to commemorate the occasion.

Black and white students alike marched on the first national holiday for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., a great black American. They proudly sang freedom songs.

We remembered the life of Dr. King

During the Centennial year, the nation observed the first federal holiday for the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., a lion for human rights in the United States and around the world.

In Frankfort, the Kentucky State University Student Government Association sponsored "The March of Times" to attest to Dr. King's mission. Beginning at the Carl M. Hill Student Center, the marchers snaked through campus and into Frankfort where they assembled on the Capitol steps.

SGA President Cuttie W. Bacon IV said, "This is the university's and the student body's way of saying, 'the dream lives on in all of us.' "

Other events took place. There was a service in First Corinthian Baptist Church. President Burse presided, and the Gospel Ensemble sang.

That week, the city also renamed the road from the East-West Connector to the gate of Kentucky State University, "Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Blvd."

Black History Month recognizes . . .

In poetic terms, Black History Month witnessed "A Poetic Concert" by Priscilla Hancock Cooper and Donna Bradley Morton.

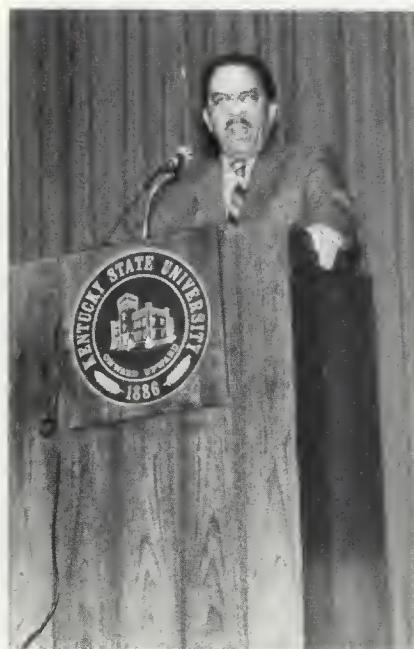

In dramatic terms, Black History Month witnessed "The Neighbors," a play probing the dynamics of a black family trying to find a home in a white neighborhood. Susan Fulkerson, Earl Thompson, Toni Moffett, and Jeff Rosenstiel starred.

... achievements of African-Americans

Former KSU President Carl M. Hill returned to campus to remind the university community of its history. The gentlemanly Hill served as the university's seventh president.

State Rep. Carl Hines lectured on the political process that has been central to black progress in the U.S.

"Onward and Upward, a Centennial History of Kentucky State University" was written by John Hardin, a former KSU professor who put on record the university's "official" history. His book was due for publication during the Centennial.

Dr. John White, chairman of the psychology department at Berea College, came to Kentucky State in November to talk about reflexive thinking during the Renaissance. He used Shakespearean plays as his model.

Dr. Johnathan Z. Smith asserted that words — used to argue and discuss issues — allow people to learn and to achieve excellence. Smith teaches at the University of Chicago.

Gov. Martha Layne Collins spoke at a rally for higher education in Kentucky. The Thoroughbred mascots and creatures from other colleges were there too.

Gov. Collins turned out to be one of the biggest cheerleaders at the rally. She told reporters that higher education should be one of the state's top priorities.

Centennial Special Performances

It was a star-studded late winter weekend when Hollywood and Kentucky State University joined hands to celebrate the Centennial.

First, there was a student question-and-answer session.

One of the most popular couples in show business, Marilyn McCoo and Billy Davis, Jr. took the time to answer students' questions.

The fur coat worn by actor Raymond St. Jacques would keep him warm at the North Pole, much less Kentucky State University.

"Where did you get that coat, Mr. St. Jacques?"

"The coat is superficial. It's what's up here that counts," said Raymond St. Jacques, film star, as he tapped his temple with his fingers.

Nancy Wilson spoke. Mario Machado spoke. Billy Davis, Jr. and Marilyn McCoo spoke — first at the Q and A — then at a press conference. And they sang and sang and sang at a concert at the Dudgeon Civic Center — in a way that few will forget.

Marilyn McCoo gave a glittery performance at the Civic Center.

Centennial extravaganza bridges past with future

Mrs. Kim Burse, President of the KSU Women's Club and wife of our university president, had a seedling of an idea. Her vision was that there be a play or a musical or something that told the story of KSU's 100 years of existence. It would be told by students from the students' point of view. It would center on the life of the student.

Well, the idea caught on. The vision became a reality. The Women's Club secured the talents of Dr. Donald Lyons and Dr. Singer Buchanan. Dr. Lyons, director of libraries, researched and compiled the historical information necessary to create an event of this sort. He also wrote a great deal of the narration, helping make the settings lucid and giving the scenes a sense of place. Dr. Buchanan, chairman of the speech and theater department, produced and directed the event.

The musical tells 100 years of history at KSU from the recollections of four outstanding university personalities: Dr. Henry Cheaney, professor emeritus of history and political science; Mrs. Helen F. Holmes, former chairperson of the English department; Mrs. Ann H. Hunter, for whom Hunter Hall is named; and Dr. LeRoy V. Smith, chairman of Health and Physical Education.

The extravaganza depicted scenes from the turn of the century, the 20's and 30's, the "beanie era" of the 50's, and the current scene of the 80's.

Mrs. Burse and Dr. Buchanan said that KSU has seen and heard the oratory of W.E.B. DuBois and the blues of Count Basie and has now grown and developed into an institution that serves all people.

Lesley Brown and Juan Harraway . . . how's that for spirit?

Student Government stimulates varied campus activities

“... There was this young man . . .” (Watch out for the shaggy dog!) —
SGA President Cuttie W. Bacon IV in action.

The torch is passed to the next administration as Bacon installs Jacques Wigington during the SGA banquet.

The 1986 Student Government Association provided the student body with a variety of activities designed to promote and enhance student participation at Kentucky State.

The highlight of these events was a march dubbed the “March of Times.” It was undertaken to honor the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. on the first national holiday recognizing the great civil rights leader. The march assembled at the Student Center and wound through Frankfort to the state capitol. SGA President Cuttie William Bacon IV also appeared on the WDRB-TV talk show “Introspect” to discuss the march that day. Also appearing at the march were President Burse, Frankfort Mayor Jim Burch, and Lt. Gov. Steven Beshear. More than 750 students, staff, alumni and townspeople participated.

The SGA also sponsored a free trip to Kings Island, transportation to the Morehouse football game in Atlanta, and provided free tickets to the Homecoming Concert. Fresh Friday included the band “The Movies,” and an after-set in the Capital Plaza Hotel.

The SGA also sponsored “Open Forums” on Friday afternoons to solicit student comments. The results were literally, “no comment.”

The Centennial SGA included: Cuttie W. Bacon IV, president; Tracee Y. Moreland, vice-president; Traci Noland, secretary; Ted Clark, treasurer; Denice Higgins Carter, chief justice of student court. Senators Traci Cummings, Renee Snorton, Tim Sorrell, and Kira Terhune, all freshman; Traci Noland and Anthony Howard, sophomores; Traci Randleman and Jacques Wigington, juniors; and senior Ted Clark.

Newly-elected officers for 1986-87 include Jacques Wigington, president; Marcus Simpson, vice-president; John Sanders, secretary; Jerald Miles, treasurer; and Sam Meaux, chief justice of student court.

A convocation for academic standouts

Kentucky State's Who's Who

Once a year, just prior to commencement, Kentucky State honors those students who have excelled, not just persevered. The annual Honors Convocation is a chance for the standouts to be recognized, and for those who aspire to excellence to take note. The Centennial Honors Convocation was addressed by Dr. Anthony Remson, a KSU grad now practicing medicine in Roanoke, Va. Dr. Remson cited leaders, scientists and others who persisted until they won.

Faculty Senate President Martha Woelfel said, "We have always been proud of you . . . We have watched you grow." She asked for a round of applause for the honorees.

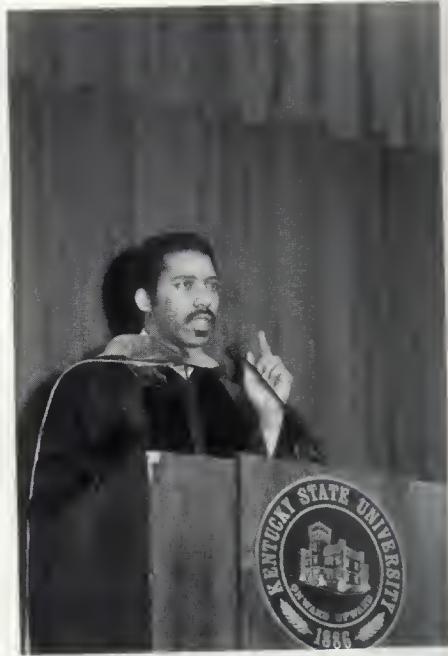

The top senior was Mary Roberts, who maintained the highest grade point average in her class while managing a home. She is off now to University of Kentucky School of Law.

The top four freshmen last year were Carla Collins, Karen Davis, Jeff Rosenstiel and Lisa Jobert-Whaley.

Others who were honored included Demetrit Rushin, who received the Kentucky Association of Educational Opportunity Program Personnel Scholarship Award.

KSU Foundation, Inc., Scholarships included, Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority Scholarship: Lesley B. Brown; Patricia Bryant Memorial Scholarship: Kay Frances Schlagene; Henry E. Cheaney Endowed Scholarship: Rita K. Snider; Chicago Alumni Chapter: Tamara Hollowell; Cincinnati Alumni Chapter Scholarship: Toni L. Jackson; Robert and Anna B. Davis Scholarship: Dianne Thornhill; Frankfort Alumni Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority: William R. Brown, LaShelle Figgs, Verita Griffin, Serena Redden, William Reed, Sheldon G. Robinson.

Also, Engineering Scholarship: Paul Nelson; William M. Falls, Sr. Athletic Scholarship: Terry Johnson; Viola F. Gilmore Scholarship: Tonya Triplett; First Baptist Church (Frankfort, Ky.) Gospel Choir Scholarship: Cuttie W. Bacon, IV, Troy Brooks, Melanie A. Porter, Serena Redden, Dannee Thomas, Tammy Washington.

Twelve Kentucky State University students were nominated in 1986 for inclusion in the publication, Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities.

The 12 from Kentucky State include: Linda Brown, of Lexington, KY; Jayme Cooper, of Lexington, KY; Terri Golden, of Toledo, Ohio; Tawonda Jones, of Dayton, Ohio; Joseph Lubrecht, of Flint, Mich.; Tracee Moreland, of Dayton, Ohio; Robin Moseley, of Dayton, Ohio; Traci Randleman, of Lorain, Ohio; Marcus Simpson, Lexington, KY; Dianne Thornhill, of Montreal, Canada; and Jacques Wigginton of Lexington, KY.

According to the Publisher, more than 1,400 senior colleges have adopted this program as part of their campus honors.

Selections are made by campus nominations and are based on decidedly above-average academic standing, community service, leadership ability and potential for continued success.

A parade of honorees marched across the Bradford Hall Auditorium stage.

Commissioned second lieutenants

A special moment in the Convocation came when the Rev. and Mrs. Lawrence Milliken presented an ROTC award named for their son, the late Mark Milliken, who died the previous year in an automobile accident.

Among those commissioned as second lieutenants was Darlene Sims, second from right, below, who received the first Milliken Award.

The long and the short of it happened on the stage of Bradford Hall Auditorium as student nurses were "pinned" by family members. The process signifies that the student will soon be a "pro." Those who complete the program receive an Associate Degree in Nursing, conferred at Commencement.

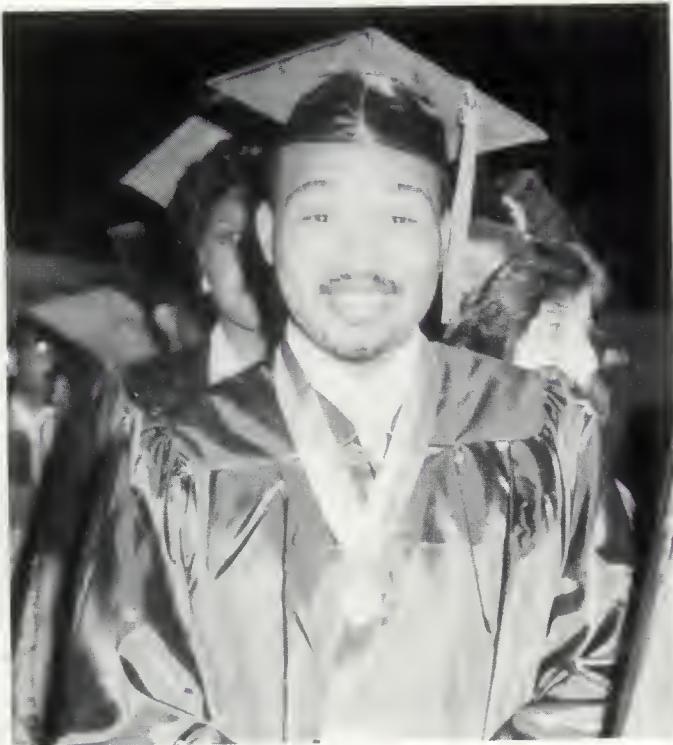

Along with the pin go a family's wishes for great success.

The class of degree candidates put in many hours of study, practical experience and exam preparation before that night.

Centennial Class achieves a degree of success . . . and a license to achieve.

Adolphus Boyd, adorned with his centennial medallion, carried his "ticket," a card to be checked by the registrar prior to receiving his degree. He also wore a smile of satisfaction.

Kyle Harper, a student athlete, received his degree and a handshake from Dr. McArthur Darby, vice-president of Academic Affairs.

Pomp, circumstance, and smiling faces are not unusual at commencement exercises. This year's ceremony was no exception. There was a special aspect however, to Commencement '86. This was the Centennial Class. This class marked Kentucky State University's 100 years of service to the Commonwealth.

Dr. Julian M. Earls, chief of health, safety and security at the Lewis Research Center of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Cleveland was a fitting speaker. He told the graduates of the real-life usefulness of common sense. He reminded all who listened that respect is not conferred with a college degree, but earned through seizing and developing opportunities.

Regents Barney Tucker and Luska J. Twyman were awarded honorary doctoral degrees. Distinguished Service Awards were awarded to State Sen. Fred Bradley, State Rep. C. M. "Hank" Hancock, State Rep. Carl Hines, former State Rep. Mae Street Kidd, and former State Rep. Aubrey Williams, all having helped mold the university in a positive way.

The Centennial Class was further distinguished as the second largest commencement class in KSU history, with 240 graduates. Only the class of 1977 was larger, numbering 259. Mary Roberts, a psychology major and mother of three, was the top graduate, summa cum laude.

To graduate is good, to graduate with honors is better. These students graduated cum laude, magna cum laude and summa cum laude.

Dr. Johnny D. Sheppard, vice-president of Student Affairs, served as the grand marshal. His solemn expression may reflect memories of his own commencement a quarter-century ago, when he received his bachelor's degree from this university.

One step beyond . . . These graduates received the Master of Public Affairs degree.

Smiles, smiles, smiles for miles . . . Happy grads rejoice at the commencement. Now the real work begins.

Dr. Julian M. Earls, chief of health, safety and security at the NASA Lewis Research Center, delivered a witty, biting, humorous commencement address. He reminded the class that a degree won't make you smart and that respect is earned.

President Burse and former State Rep. Mae Street Kidd shared a joyful moment when Mrs. Kidd received a Distinguished Service Award for supporting Kentucky State University over the years.

Darlene Jackson of University Relations sold a ticket to the commencement reception to Phillip Bibbs, now a Class of '86 alumnus. Below, Carol James is surrounded by family and friends, and Dr. Herman Walston, her mentor, after the "magic moment."

The Administration

Raymond M. Burse, ninth president of Kentucky State University

A good president of Kentucky State University must be able to explain concepts, like he did with Mrs. Eleanor Hume O'Rear at the re-dedication of Hume Hall

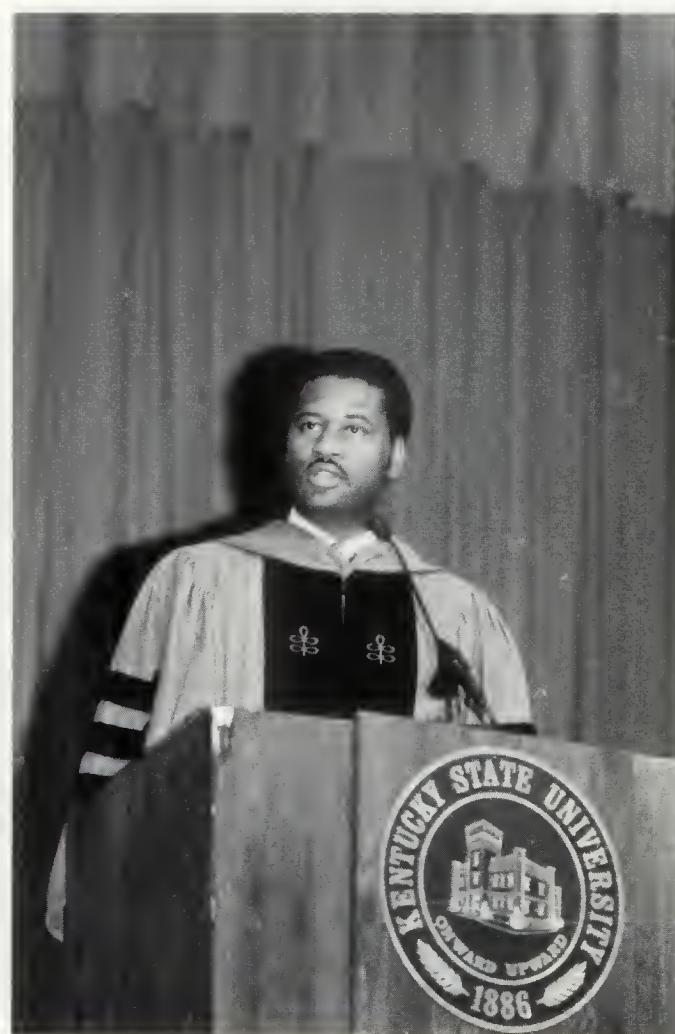

... must take a role in student activities, as he did with the KSU Band during the tree planting ceremony.

... must listen carefully as he did with the cheerleaders during an open forum.

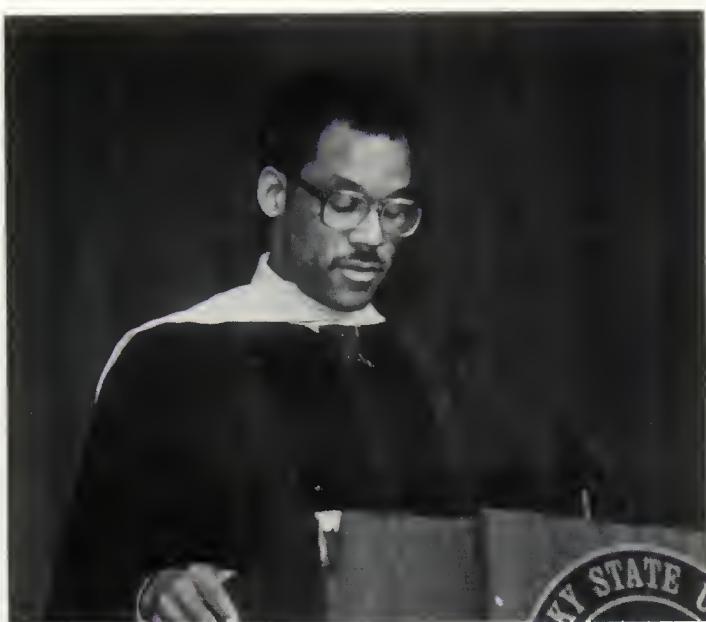

... must be an official meeter and greeter, as he was at commencement.

... must always see the big picture.

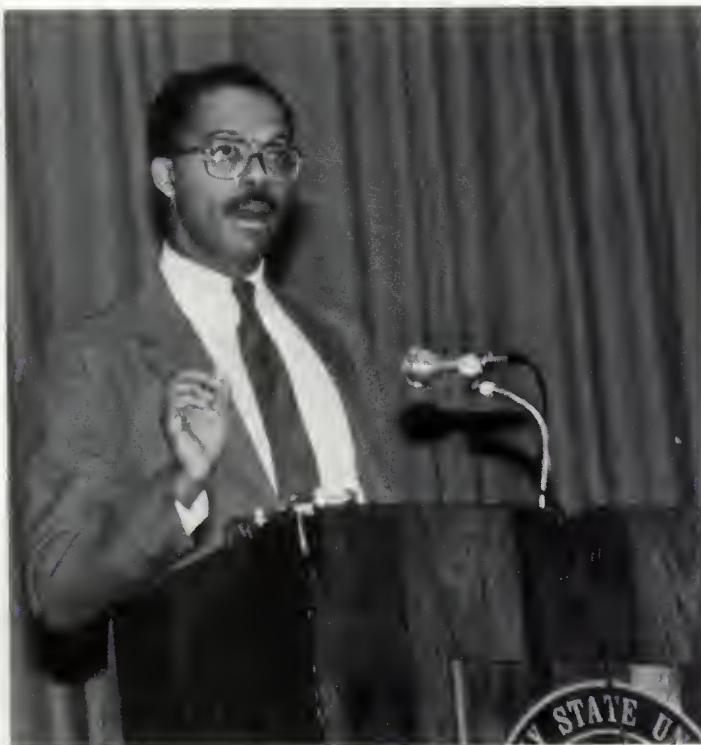

All the president's men and women

Dr. MacArthur Darby, Vice-President for Academic Affairs

Dr. Johnny D. Sheppard, Vice-President for Student Affairs

Reginald Thomas,
General Counsel
to the University

The job of running Kentucky State University would be nearly impossible without the assistance of trusted lieutenants.

They take care of the details and carry out the policies of the University.

Pearline Chase, Executive Assistant to the President, with President Burse.

Charles Lambert, Special Assistant to the President.

The Centennial Thorobred Staff

We are Family

This year has been very special for the whole Kentucky State University family because of our big birthday, our Centennial. It has been a pleasure to watch our university grow in a positive direction. We watched as Hume Hall was resurrected, as programs were expanded, as endowments increased. We were not just getting older, we were getting better.

The Thorobred staff and I have taken great pride in putting together a record of the Centennial year. We want this book to reflect what happened at KSU in the academic year 1985-1986 — the good times and the bad, the joy and the pain. We judge it a success, but the Thorobred won't truly be a success unless we make you feel like you were there through this yearbook and can return at any time by turning its pages.

Through it all, the staff strived to set up appointments, make photographs and layouts, write the text, make deadlines and generally make the Thorobred the best we could make it. We hope that these words and pictures will encourage you to Keep Striving Upward with Kentucky State University.

A project of this size could not have succeeded without the help of some special people. We would like to thank President Raymond M. Burse; Dr. Johnny Sheppard, vice-president for Student Affairs; Mr. William Hamilton, director of Student Publications; Ms. Debora Nance, editorial assistant; and of course the staff which put in the long hours. The staff will not remain nameless. They include: Regina Jackson, James Elder, Tonya Sangester, Stacey Bryant, The Rev. Arthur Williams, Kim Goodloe, Damon Grady, Leon Robinson, Sabrena Kelly, Lisa Smith, Eric Scruggs, Angie Patterson, Billy Frazier, Eric Hunter, Cuttie Bacon and Gill Finley. There are many others, in the course of this project, who gave us their time. We hope they understand our unspoken appreciation.

Finally, a Centennial yearbook, a Centennial and a true university serve one ultimate purpose: to remind us that we are all family. Let's keep our family a close one.

Happy Birthday!

Sincerely,

Carol James, editor

Alma Mater

Hail to our Alma Mater, Dear is her name,
And there shall be no other to surpass her fame.
Hers is the hand that guides us Day after day,
And She will stand beside us, When we go on our way,

May blessing be upon Her, Shepherd of youth;
She holds the seat of honor, In the hall of truth.
Mem'ries of Her shall never fade from our hearts,
And we will praise Her ever, for the love She imparts.

Sing ev'ry voice together, Let echoes rise.
Hail to our Alma Mater, Shout to the skies.
Holding the torch of wisdom, she leads the way
Clasping the hand of freedom, As She marches along.
